ROME

Having opened earlier this month directly across from the Mausoleum of Augustus, every inch of the Bulgari Hotel Roma (left and below) pays tribute to the ancient roots of La Città Eterna. Brush up on your history in the on-site Reading Room and then decamp to Fendi's headquarters at Palazzo della Civiltà Italiana, where the house is currently staging a theatrical retrospective of sculptor Arnaldo Pomodoro's monumental metallic works. From £1,650 per night. Bulgarihotels.com/rome

Pair STAYS at enticing NEW hotels with TRIPS to unmissable EXHIBITIONS this summer, says HAYLEY MAITLAND

PARIS

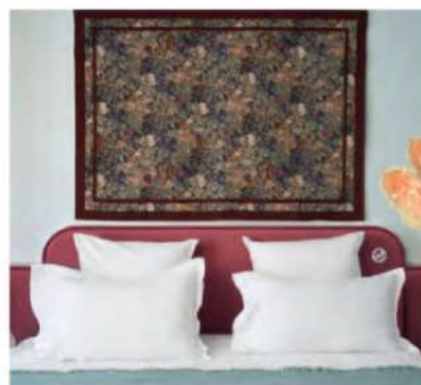

In a city known for its grande dame hotels, the Touriste group has made a name for itself tapping tastemakers to curate its bijou properties. Take French designer Chloé Nègre, who imbued the Left Bank's Beauregard with its '70s bourgeois aesthetic (below, left), or London-based Swede Beata Heuman, who brings her British-Scandi style to Hôtel de La Boétie, which opens in July. Nearby, the Palais Galliera – via its Fashion in Motion exhibition – is currently celebrating a collaboration of a different sort: the relationship between fashion and sport from the 18th century onwards. From £217 per night. HoteldelaBoetie.com

LONDON

This July, 1 Hotel Mayfair (above) – the city's first truly sustainable hotel – opens a stone's throw from Green Park. In and among the more than 1,200 trees and plants dotted across its nine storeys are specially commissioned pieces by environmentally conscious artists, such as Kate MccGwire, whose feather sculptures are inspired by the British landscape. Another milestone for the capital? The Barbican Centre plays host to a landmark exhibition this summer: a celebration of three decades of American artist Carrie Mae Weems's politically charged installations, photography and video artworks. From £700 per night. 1hotels.com/mayfair
